About the Training

This online training workshop will present in depth the evidence-based “Small Group Dinosaur Treatment” child training program developed by Dr. Carolyn Webster-Stratton. The program is designed to promote children’s problem-solving skills, appropriate classroom behaviors, and positive social skills. Program topics include: understanding feelings, problem-solving, regulating emotions, how to be friendly, and doing your best in school. The program utilizes puppet play, group work, and fun activities to teach children these skills.

This intervention program is appropriate for use by clinicians/therapists with small groups of children (ages 4-8 who have behavior problems, either in mental health settings or in schools as “pull out” sessions. Participants in this training should have experience with groups of children and a graduate degree in social work, psychology, education, nursing, counseling, or a related degree. After this training, group leaders can offer this 18-22 week curriculum to groups of children aged 4-8 years old in a therapeutic setting.
